I was in group 38 for Project 4. Originally, the group members were Long Phan, Sean Farrell, and Thom Phorn. Long Phan announced he was returning to Vietnam and no longer in the class. Sean Farrell dropped the class, and Thom Phorn didn't contact me until Sunday night before the project was due Tuesday. He hadn't started anything at that point, so, I, Robert Barnes, went it alone.

I submitted the code on my ZYBooks account (Robert Barnes).

Distribution of responsibility. I did all the work solo. I pulled a couple of late nights, as I found it very difficult to implement the methods as directed.

Overall experience. This was a daunting project. I didn't even attempt the GUI portion. I was not able to go about the project as conceived in the instructions.

If I had this to do again, I would have more aggressively worked out a schedule with my group mates instead of waiting for them to all drop the class or quit the group.

I'm not sure it was an intended consequence of the project, but I learned to stop banging my head into the wall to do the project the "approved way" and to figure out a method I could understand. Although it may affect my grade, I feel it's a more valuable lesson.
